

Evaluation of State Population and State Recruit Eligible Population to State ARNG Authorizations and State Percent Fill

The purpose of the charts is to depict an individual state or territory's ability to fill its allocated Army National Guard Force (ARNG) Structure against three attributes: 1. State Population, 2. Recruit eligible population and 3. State Guard personnel authorizations for the years 1990, 2000, 2010 and 2014.

The states percent fill of their ARNG force structure is the line chart. The three attributes (state population, recruit eligible population and ARNG personnel authorizations) are displayed as the bar chart. The bar chart is the percentage that each state comprises of the US total and above each bar is the raw number.

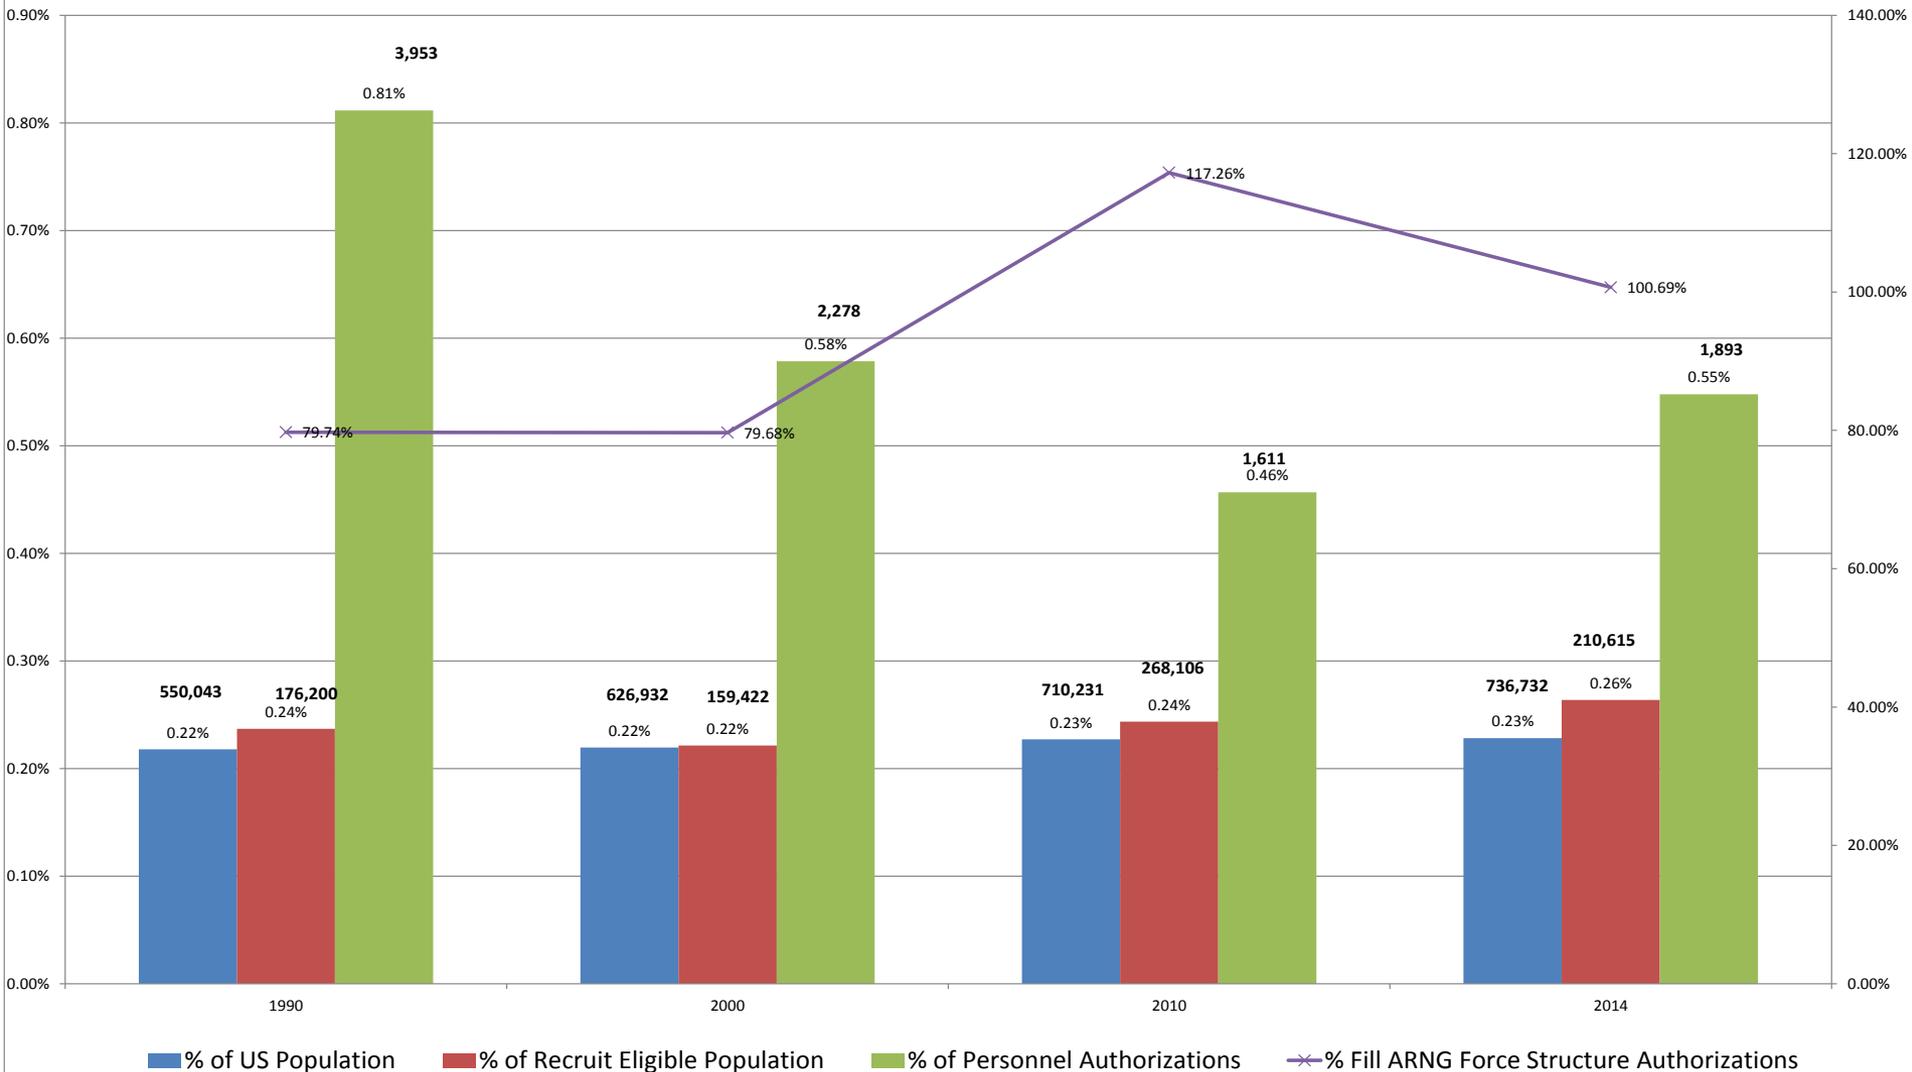

There is a dedicated chart for each state so we can analyze how each state is performing from 1990-2014 in their ability fill the allocated force structure. The eligible recruit population is defined as those citizens between 17-35. Additionally, the individual state charts show increases or decreases in the state population, recruit eligible population and ARNG personnel authorizations. The chart does not show propensity to serve or out of the eligible population, the number of citizens that meet the requirements to enlist in the state guard.
